

2023 CX and Communications Consumer Insights

For Insurers

What's at stake when insurers don't meet policyholders' expectations for a good customer experience?

With dissatisfaction nearly doubling over the past five years, we surveyed over 4,000 consumers across North America to create the learnings in our fifth annual report, CX and Communications Consumer Insights.

These are some of the questions we asked – and the answers can impact customer loyalty and the bottom line.

- Which communication channels do you prefer?
- What's your interest in moving from paper to digital?
- What do you think of the experiences you are receiving?
- Are you concerned about online privacy and data security?

Key CX and Communications Consumer Insights

Here's a sampling of what you can find in our 2023 report.

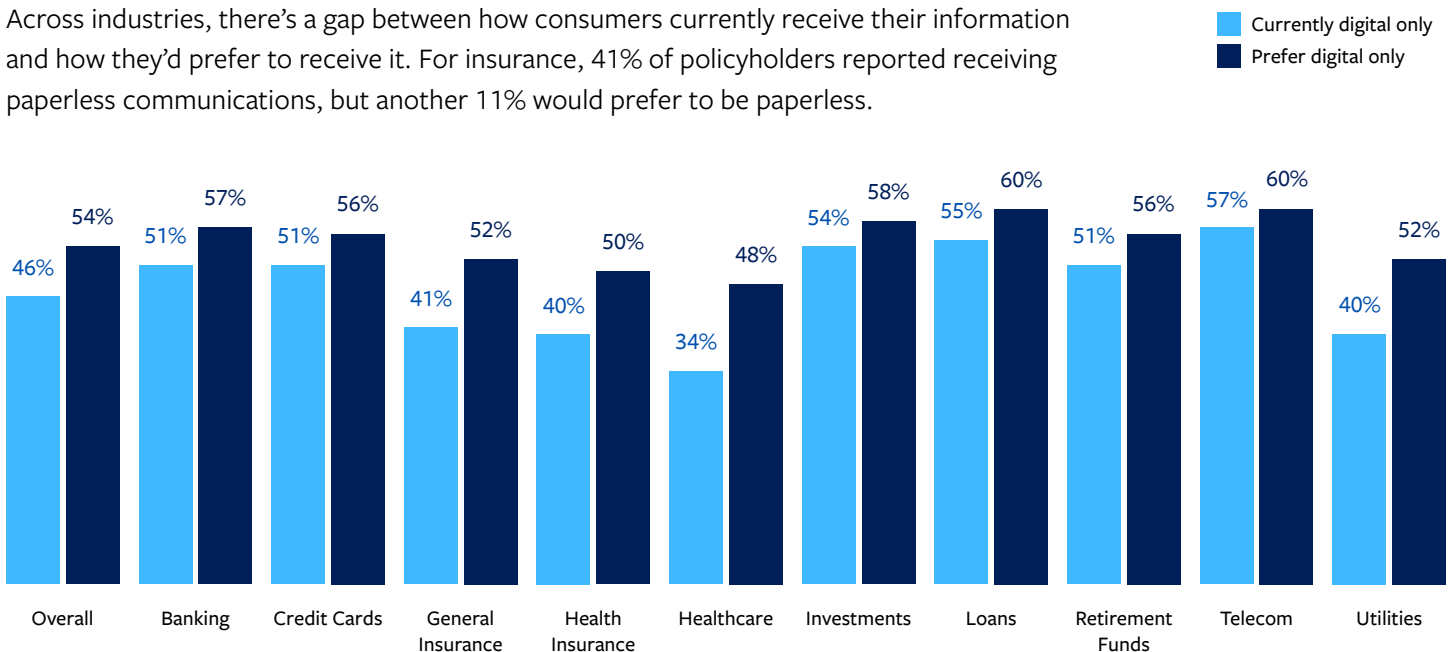

of consumers would go paperless if they received a more engaging digital experience.

of consumers indicated they want companies to customize their experience based on what the company knows about them. This is up from 74% last year.

Paperless Rates Across Verticals

Across industries, there's a gap between how consumers currently receive their information and how they'd prefer to receive it. For insurance, 41% of policyholders reported receiving paperless communications, but another 11% would prefer to be paperless.

of consumers say companies need to improve the customer experience – that's up from 35% in 2019.

of consumers have stopped doing business with a company because of a hack that exposed consumer data.

Policyholders told us:

“I still receive too much physical mail from my current insurance company. They need to do a better job using technology to communicate with me.”

“Provide more electronic security.”

“Keep it simple, be honest, be informative, tell me the most important things first.”

What our report reveals can help you improve your policyholders' communications experience, strengthen loyalty, and prepare your business for the next phase of digital transformation.
